MANIC STATE

A NFT COLLECTION

Juan Llompart

The things of the body are sometimes mad, but the things of the soul are always sane.
(The Picture of Dorian Gray)
Oscar Wilde

This NFT collection is not meant to be a bestseller or to follow market speculation.
It's simply a series of small art pieces that you can own, interpret in your own way, or just enjoy because you like how they look.

Every element in each NFT has a personal meaning for me, but once it's yours, you're free to see whatever you want in it.

Some symbols have a single, fixed meaning (certain letters or facial expressions, for example), while others are open to interpretation.

In the following pages I'll explain what some of these elements mean to me.

We've all had our own big world in a small room.

LIFE

ALEPH

ALEPH

Aleph was my most loyal companion and my best friend for eleven years. He helped me through my deepest loneliness, and being with him was, without a doubt, the best part of every single day. Just looking into his eyes was enough to make all my problems vanish as if by magic.He’s been gone for a while now, and I still miss him terribly. I can’t bring myself to look at his photos because the sadness overwhelms me completely. Whenever Facebook shows me one of those “memories” and Aleph appears, my heart turns over.Aleph was the dog I’ve loved most in my entire life. I’ll never say he was “like a person,” because that would be an insult to him —dogs are so much better than people.

DEXTER, BOWIE AND MICKEY

I have three ginger cats that I absolutely adore. Each one has a completely different personality:Dexter is the boss—serious and authoritative, he keeps order with just a glance. Bowie is the most affectionate, always seeking cuddles and purring nonstop. Mickey is the mischievous one, the one who jumps where he shouldn't and causes chaos.

Cats are very much like people: they look after their own interests, believe everything around them belongs to them, and only seek company when they feel like it.That said, when I get home all three come running to greet me, line up perfectly and wait impatiently for their treats. As soon as they get them, they dash out through the cat flap and disappear among the trees until dinner time.But no night ends without the three of them on the sofa, taking up all the space, watching Netflix with me and purring loudly.

DODO

The dodo (Raphus cucullatus) was a flightless bird endemic to the island of Mauritius in the Indian Ocean. First encountered by Portuguese sailors around 1598 and documented in detail by the Dutch from 1599 onward, it lived in forests, fed mainly on fruits, and laid a single egg on the ground. The bird stood about one meter tall and weighed up to 20 kg.After humans arrived—primarily the Dutch settlement in 1638—the dodo rapidly vanished. Sailors hunted it for its meat, while introduced animals (pigs, rats, cats, and monkeys) devastated its ground nests.

The last reliable sighting was in 1662; by the 1690s, the species was extinct. The dodo has since become the universal symbol of human-caused extinction.

MANTIS

The praying mantis (Mantis religiosa) is a predatory insect famous for its “praying” posture, slow deliberate movements, and exceptional camouflage. Native to Europe, Asia, and Africa, it has spread worldwide. Adults measure 4–8 cm, with large compound eyes and spiked forelegs that strike prey with deadly precision.Culturally, the mantis symbolizes patience, stillness, focus, and inner strength. In many traditions (China, Japan, Africa), it is regarded as a spiritual guide that teaches the power of waiting and striking at the perfect moment. Its sexual cannibalism—where the female sometimes devours the male after mating—has also made it an emblem of feminine power, the femme fatale, and the destructive force of seduction.

OWL

The owl is a nocturnal bird of prey renowned for its silent flight, extraordinary vision and hearing, and the ability to rotate its head up to 270°. Over 200 species exist, from the tiny elf owl to the imposing Eurasian eagle-owl.Across cultures, the owl almost universally symbolizes wisdom, deep knowledge, and mystery. In ancient Greece it was sacred to Athena, goddess of wisdom. Yet in many Native American and medieval European traditions, its nighttime call and piercing stare linked it to death, the afterlife, and ominous omens. Today it represents intuition, the power to see what is hidden, and a profound connection to the spiritual or esoteric realms.

OCTOPUS

The octopus is a marine cephalopod of extraordinary intelligence: it solves mazes, uses tools, opens jars, and changes color and texture in milliseconds to camouflage or communicate. With three hearts, blue blood, and a distributed nervous system, its eight arms operate almost independently.Symbolically, it represents mystery, adaptability, fluid intelligence, and regeneration (it can regrow lost arms). In Japan it is a mythical creature linked to creativity and the unconscious. In Mediterranean and Polynesian cultures it appears as a guardian of abyssal secrets, embodying complexity, cunning, and sometimes danger. Today it stands as an emblem of non-human consciousness and alien-like intelligence.

ANT

The ant is a social insect that lives in highly organized colonies of thousands or millions, with perfect division of labor: workers, soldiers, and queen. Its relative strength is legendary—it can carry up to 50 times its own weight—and it builds complex underground structures.Symbolically, the ant represents tireless work, discipline, cooperation, self-sacrifice for the common good, and foresight. In the Bible (Proverbs 6:6) it is held up as a model of diligence. In African and Asian cultures it signifies community and perseverance. Aesop's fable contrasts it with the grasshopper to teach planning. Today it embodies collective resilience and the power of united small forces.

SNAKE

The snake is a legless reptile that moves by undulation, periodically sheds its entire skin, and in many species carries deadly venom. Present on every continent except Antarctica, it has fascinated and terrified humans since prehistory.Symbolically, it embodies renewal (through shedding), hidden wisdom, and healing (the caduceus and pharmacy symbol), yet also betrayal, temptation, and mortal danger (Genesis, Medusa). In Mesoamerica it is Quetzalcoatl, god of knowledge; in India, dormant kundalini energy; in Africa and Australia, a creator ancestor. Forever ambivalent, it represents life and death, earth and underworld, sexuality and transcendence—the eternal cycle of destruction and regeneration.

LADYBUG

The ladybug (Coccinellidae) is a small beetle with bright red wings and black spots, universally regarded as a symbol of good luck. In almost every culture, its arrival is believed to bring fortune, love, or the fulfillment of wishes; tradition holds that you let it land on you, make a wish, and gently blow it away.In medieval Europe it was called “the beetle of Our Lady” (hence “ladybug”), because farmers saw it devour aphids and protect crops, viewing it as a gift from the Virgin Mary. It represents protection, renewal, joy, and transformation. Its presence reminds us that even the smallest creatures can be powerful and that good luck often arrives unexpectedly.

PANDA

The panda (Ailuropoda melanoleuca), with its distinctive black-and-white fur, is a global symbol of peace, gentleness, and conservation. Native to China, it represents balance (yin-yang) due to its contrasting colors and calm demeanor. In Chinese culture it embodies good fortune, diplomacy, and positive transformation.

Since 1961, the giant panda has been the logo of the WWF (World Wildlife Fund), becoming the universal icon of endangered species protection and environmental awareness. Its vulnerable status reminds humanity of the fragility of nature. Spiritually, the panda symbolizes patience, self-care, and living in harmony with one's environment, teaching that strength can be quiet and power doesn't need aggression.

FLY

The fly, a tiny dipteran with complete metamorphosis, has always been the insect of filth and death. It feeds on corpses, excrement, and open wounds, thus embodying both physical and moral corruption. In Judeo-Christian tradition it is the attribute of Beelzebub, “Lord of the Flies,” turning any space it enters into a symbol of sin and the soul’s decay. Its persistent, circling buzz evokes obsessive thoughts, unrelenting guilt, and remorse that never rests. Though its life lasts only a few weeks, that very brevity has made it an emblem of vanity and the fleeting nature of existence, appearing in baroque vanitas alongside skulls and withered flowers. In biblical and Egyptian plagues it stands for divine punishment and inevitable contagion. Finally, its cycle—egg, larva, pupa, winged adult—turns the fly into a paradox of transformation: born from putrefaction yet reminding us that from death new life can emerge. Thus this insignificant creature becomes a brutal mirror of human fragility before the unclean, the ephemeral, and the inescapable.

BUTTERFLY

The butterfly, an insect of complete metamorphosis, is the universal symbol of transformation and resurrection. From the devouring caterpillar emerges the motionless chrysalis, and from it the radiant, winged adult, fragile yet luminous. In ancient Greece it represented the soul (psyché) leaving the body at death. Christianity adopted it as an image of Christ's resurrection: tomb-chrysalis, heaven-flight. In the East it signifies joy, conjugal love, and longevity; in Japan, a butterfly's visit heralds good fortune. Its brief adult life embodies ephemeral beauty and the vanity of worldly things. Thus, the butterfly links death and rebirth, matter and spirit, captivity and freedom, becoming the most delicate emblem of hope triumphing over darkness.

COCKROACH

The cockroach, a nocturnal and indestructible insect, is the universal symbol of the abhorrent that outlives everything. Able to withstand radiation, starvation, and even decapitation, it embodies blind persistence and invincible filth. Culturally, it represents poverty, urban squalor, and whatever society discards yet can never eradicate. In literature and horror films, it is the nightmare that returns, the guilt that refuses to die, the terror of the low and crawling. For Kafka (“The Metamorphosis”), it is the absolute degradation of a human turned vermin. In popular songs and sayings, we mock it, yet always with unease: crushing one is never enough; another will come. Thus, the cockroach is the cruel mirror of our own fragility and of everything repulsive we prefer not to see—yet that endures.

EARTHWORM

The earthworm, a blind, legless creature dwelling in damp darkness, is the humble symbol of regeneration and fertile death. It inhabits decay, consumes the dead, and excretes rich soil, turning corpses into life. In medieval Christianity it stood for utter humility and bodily resurrection (“dust you are and to dust you shall return”). For Darwin it was the silent architect of the earth. In ancient myths (Egyptian, Norse), worms arise from fallen giants’ flesh and prepare the renewed world. Its ability to regenerate severed segments symbolizes life prevailing over mutilation. Thus, the lowliest being makes the highest possible: from putrefaction springs fertility.

FROG

The frog, an amphibian born in water and leaping onto land, is the universal symbol of transition and resurrection. From gill-breathing tadpole to lung-breathing adult, it embodies metamorphosis and the passage between realms: water-unconscious, land-consciousness. In Egypt, frog-headed Heket presided over childbirth; in the Bible, frogs are plague and primordial chaos. To the Chinese they herald rain and prosperity; in Japan, safe travel. Their nocturnal croaking evokes the voice of desire and fertility. In European fairy tales the frog turns into a prince: beauty hidden beneath the slimy and repulsive. Thus the frog unites death and life, the lowly and the noble, reminding us that every transformation demands we embrace the wet, the dark, and the seemingly unworthy.

ACCESSORIES

BRICK

The brick: humble, heavy, eternal.
It's the smallest unit of every home, the block that carries dreams, storms, and generations. Without it there are no walls; without walls, no shelter; without shelter, no home.Yet this brick bears the word "HELP" and a rope around its neck.
It is the weight we sometimes carry when we build alone, when the house we raise becomes a cage.
In my NFT collection, this pendant is a reminder that even the strongest material can silently scream.Because we've all, at some point, been that brick: essential, resilient… and on the verge of sinking.

KRYPTONITE

Kryptonite is a fictional mineral from the destroyed planet Krypton, Superman's homeworld. Its radiation is the primary weakness of Kryptonians. The most common type, green kryptonite, causes intense pain, weakness, nausea, and can eventually kill Superman with prolonged exposure. Other variants exist: red kryptonite produces unpredictable and often bizarre effects, gold kryptonite permanently removes superpowers, blue kryptonite affects Bizarro (Superman's imperfect duplicate), and many others (black, silver, pink, etc.) have appeared across different comic eras with varying consequences. In essence, kryptonite represents the one true vulnerability of an otherwise nearly invincible hero, proving that even the mightiest have an Achilles' heel.

BEE

This golden and bronze bee pendant is far more than jewelry: it embodies tireless work, community, and harmony with nature. Since ancient times, the bee has symbolized immortality in Egypt, resurrection in early Christianity, royalty for Napoleon, and the perfect cooperation of the hive. Wearing it close to the heart serves as a reminder of collective strength, the sweetness of honey born from shared effort, and the fragile balance of ecosystems. It is an elegant talisman of productivity, loyalty, and rebirth, a tiny queen whispering that even the smallest beings can sustain entire worlds.

CROSSES

This layered necklace, heavy with crosses of wood, silver, gold, and bronze, is a personal rosary of faith and memory. Each crucifix carries its own story: some plain and humble, others ornate with tiny suffering Christs, forming a quiet choir of redemption around the neck. Worn together, they transcend simple devotion; they become armor against doubt, a chronicle of prayers answered and unanswered, a reminder that grace arrives in countless forms. It is both shield and confession: the weight of many crosses transforming into the lightness of carried hope.

STAR

This bold golden star pendant is a quiet declaration of light in darkness. The star has guided sailors, marked kings, and crowned dreamers since antiquity: a five-pointed promise that direction exists even when skies are black. Worn against the skin, it becomes personal north, a reminder to rise after every fall, to keep aiming higher than circumstance allows. Its sharp, polished edges catch every glint of light, turning the wearer into a walking constellation. More than ornament, it is ambition made tangible: a small, fierce sun that says “you are allowed to shine unapologetically.”

DIAMONDS

This breathtaking diamond waterfall necklace is pure celestial poetry made wearable. Hundreds of brilliant-cut stones cascade in perfect rivers of light, catching every breath and heartbeat, while the final star pendant blazes like a fallen constellation. Diamonds have always meant unbreakable strength and eternal love; here they become liquid fire, a reminder that even the hardest substance can flow with grace. Worn against the throat, it transforms the wearer into night itself wearing its own galaxy: luminous, untouchable, quietly commanding every gaze. It whispers one truth: some light is meant to pour, not merely shine.

WORLD

This delicate globe pendant, no larger than a raindrop, holds the entire world against your heartbeat. Silver continents float over deep blue enamel oceans, a quiet reminder that every border is artificial when seen from the distance of love or wonder. Worn close to the heart, it becomes a private vow: to carry the planet gently, to remember its fragility, to dream beyond maps. It whispers that whoever wears it refuses to think small; they hold seven billion stories, every mountain and tide, in one small sphere of hope and responsibility.

SKULLS

This savage necklace of carved skulls, some with glowing turquoise eyes, is a modern memento mori wrapped in rebellion. Each tiny death's-head remembers that empires fall, beauty fades, and time devours everything. Yet far from despair, it celebrates fearless living: wear your mortality like armor, laugh in the face of endings, dance while the clock ticks. The skulls rattle softly with every heartbeat, whispering "be alive now." It is the jewelry of pirates, rockstars, and anyone who refuses to waste a single breath pretending forever exists. Death adorns the neck so life can burn brighter.

PEARLS

This silver pearl necklace turns one of humanity's oldest symbols into wearable meaning. The pearl, the only gem born from a living creature's suffering, represents the transformation of pain into beauty, wisdom gained through time, and purity that resists corruption.Across cultures it has stood for the moon, divine tears, perfection, and spiritual protection. Its soft, inner light speaks of modesty and deep wealth. Worn close to the heart, it carries a quiet message: resilience, grace under pressure, and the calm certainty that what endures silently often shines brightest.

HEART

Purple crystal heart pendant, faceted cut, hanging from a simple black cord.It’s a straightforward symbol: love that is no longer soft or organic, but hard, transparent, and sharp. The crystal reveals everything it feels with nothing hidden, yet it can also shatter or cut.The intense purple speaks of strong passion, mystery, and a hint of danger. Wearing it at the neck says: “My heart is pure, but not fragile; it’s armored, glows in the dark, and if necessary, it cuts.”Love turned into a beautiful weapon.

DEATH

Skull pendant, carved in ivory-colored bone or resin, hanging from a dark leather cord. It’s not jewelry; it’s a raw reminder. Death worn on the chest, right above the beating heart.It symbolizes the inevitable: no matter how much you love, fight, or run, this is waiting for you. But it’s also defiance: “I look into your empty eyes and I’m still alive. ”It’s protection for those who don’t fear the night, a talisman for those who have accepted that everything ends and therefore live without fear.Wearing the skull says: “I know I’m going to die, so nothing shuts me up or stops me.” Pure, hard memento mori.

SHARK TOOTH

Shark tooth pendant, razor-sharp and white, hanging from a raw dark leather cord.It's a trophy and a warning. The ocean either respects you or eats you; you chose the first. Wearing it marks you as a survivor—someone who stared down the predator and took a piece of it.It stands for pure strength, instinct, controlled danger. Not jewelry to show off, but a fang to remember: I'm fast, I'm lethal if pushed, and nothing swallows me alive. On your chest beats a reminder: life is bite or be bitten.
